For a problem-solving approach to the topics discussed in this chapter, see:

An excellent text on development economics is:

Analysis of the relationship between trade and economic development is found in:

An evaluation of the relevance of trade theory to development is found in:

For a discussion and evaluation of international trade as an engine of growth, see:

For empirical estimates of the contribution that international trade can make toward economic development, see:

Endogenous growth theory is examined in:

For the East Asian growth miracle and crisis, see:

For a discussion of the various terms of trade, see:

The reasons for the belief that the terms of trade of developing nations tend to deteriorate over time are found in:

For measurements of the commodity terms of trade of developing nations, see:

The most important studies on the export instability in developing nations are:

The classics on import substitution are:

Trade liberalization in developing countries is examined in:

For conditions in and policies toward developing countries, and a discussion of a new international economic order, see:

Chapter 11 Online

On the international debt problem of developing countries, see:

On globalization and poverty, see:
F. Campano and D. Salvatore, Income Inequality (New York: Oxford University Press, 2006).

The importance of the Uruguay and Doha Rounds to developing nations is examined in:

The most important data sources on developing nation are:
INTERNet

The data and other information used in this chapter are found in the 2012 World Bank’s World Development Report, the International Monetary Fund’s (IMF) 2011 International Financial Statistics and World Economic Outlook, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development’s (UNCTADs) 2011 Trade and Development Report, and the United Nations Development Program’s (UNDPs) 2011 Human Development Report. All reports, except International Financial Statistics, can be accessed through the Internet by clicking the name of the report after accessing the organization Web site at:

http://www.worldbank.org
http://www.imf.org
http://www.unctad.org
http://hdr.undp.org